DICTIONARY OF VETERINARY EPIDEMIOLOGY

B. Toma, J.P. Vaillancourt, Barbara Dufour, M. Eloit, F. Moutou, W. Marsh, J.J. Bénet, M. Sanaa, and P. Michel

Editors prepared with the support of the Office International des Epizooties, Paris

PUBLICATION DATE: May 28, 1999

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

This dictionary comprises the first English-language source of definitions of terminology used worldwide in the study and practice of veterinary epidemiology. Based on the translation of the Glossaire d'épidémiologie animale (1991) and expanded to include North American terminology, Dictionary of Veterinary Epidemiology provides valuable information regarding transport, wellness, and medical treatment of animals as well as control of the spread of diseases within and among animal populations.

Dictionary of Veterinary Epidemiology contains:

- Formal, commonly accepted definitions of words and expressions used in reference to epidemiologic principles and methods by veterinarians and other animal health professionals in North America and Europe.
- Nomenclature of economics and biostatistics, two disciplines highly relevant to epidemiology and animal health.
- Comments and/or examples, synonyms, and cross-reference(s) to related terms in the book that accompany each definition.
- A list of principle sources used to compile the dictionary, which provides a source of recommended reading for additional information about specific topics.

In addition to the translators, the text has nine editors, two associate editors, and 55 contributors, veterinary medicine experts, from the United States, Canada, Belgium, and the United Kingdom.
